BRIEFING

Cyprus: 'TRNC' leader Denktas said in a conference in Ankara on Thursday that the Annan Plan would destroy Turkish Cypriots. 'If we are not given what we want,' Denktas warned, 'we will have to withdraw and fight for the rejection of the plan.' Denktas regards the prospects for a solution before May 1 as 'a fantasy.' He claimed that no progress has been made in the negotiations thus far.
Turkish leaders were concerned by Denktas' maneuvering, and warned him that the issue must be resolved, "Radikal" reported. Contrary to his earlier statement on Thursday, Denktas said after meeting with Prime Minister Erdogan and Foreign Minister Gul that he was 'hopeful' of a settlement before May. In talks with US Special Cyprus Coordinator Thomas Weston, Ankara said that international sanctions against the 'TRNC' should be lifted if there is no agreement before May 1, according to "Cumhuriyet." Ankara underlined Greek Cypriot attempts to increase the range of their missiles while carrying out peace talks with the Turks, the paper added. Ankara complained to Weston that the Greek Cypriots will join the EU even if the peace talks fail, leaving the Turks empty handed.

Turkey, Israel sign water deal: An agreement for selling Turkish water to Israel, an issue under discussion since the mid-1990s, was finally signed on Thursday by the foreign ministry undersecretaries of the two countries. Turkish leaders Erdogan and Gul are reluctant to strengthen ties with Israel due to Israel's policy in Palestine, "Cumhuriyet" claims. Concerned by the reaction of its grassroots on the eve of upcoming local elections, the ruling AK Party decided to keep a low profile at the signing ceremony. The agreement will contribute to the development of peace and stability in the Middle East, an MFA spokesman said. According to the agreement, Turkey will sell 50 million cubic meters annually to Israel for the next 20 years.

Foreign nationals assigned to Fener Patriarchate: For the first time since 1923, six foreign nationals (i.e., non-Turkish citizens) have been appointed to the Fener Patriarchate Synod in Istanbul, a move described by Turkish papers as a violation of the Lausanne Treaty. The new board includes two metropolitans from Greece, two archbishops from the US and Britain, and two former archbishops from New Zealand and Finland. The possibility of an appointment of a foreigner as Patriarch would be 'unacceptable,' a high level MFA source told the press. Thus far, the Patriarchate has not notified the MFA about the appointments, "Hurriyet" claims.

EDITORIAL OPINION: Iraq; Greater Middle East Initiative

"Iraq"

Yilmaz Oztuna warned in the conservative Turkiye (3/5): "It seems that the newly-designed constitution for Iraq is a disappointment for Turkey. This is not the end of the story in Iraq, and undoubtedly there will be more new drafts and revisions along the way. Turkey's uneasiness stems from the treatment of the Turkmen, because they were not recognized as equals with the Kurds even though their demographic numbers are the same. The constitution could have at least recognized Turkish as an official language along with Arabic and Kurdish, yet that also did not happen. . Turkey cannot remain indifferent to the Turkmen population in Iraq. Turkey should not sit and watch the developments in northern Iraq. It is against our national interests. Let's not forget that we are directly involved in the problems of 200,000 Turks in Cyprus. . Nevertheless, Turkey has narrowed its options for engagement significantly after the refusal by Turkey to become involved in the Gulf war. The US offered us a strategic alliance, and we declined. Let us hope that the same mistake will not be repeated with regard to the GME initiative."

"Greater Middle East"

Hasan Cemal analyzed in the mass appeal Milliyet (3/4): "The US has not finalized its plan for the GME, but the process of gathering reaction and opinions from US allies continues. It seems that France and Germany have decided to work together to shape a joint plan. The Arab world, on the other hand, is apparently very disturbed about developments. Turkey is still debating its possible role and influence on this issue. Yet there is no single opinion in Ankara, and also no game plan. According to circles close to Foreign Minister Gul as well as sources within the MFA, there is a concern about how the project will be implemented. Everybody agrees on the need for reforms in this region, but a plan to implement reforms through outside pressure is a cause for skepticism. . Turkish experts also believe that the US will eventually work together with the EU to shape a well-balanced and workable model for the Middle East. When it comes to regional issues, including the Palestine issue, Turkey generally aligns itself with EU views rather than the US. . In sum, the GME project has been accepted in Turkey as a concept. It remains to be seen where and how the project's goals will be reached."
